

- SPEAKER 1: We're here with [? Shahan ?] and with London. And London has just had her first birthday. She's 13 months old. So one of the things we'd like to see is if she can touch her own ear. Because babies heads are so large that often they can't reach over their head and touch their ear. So let's see if we can get London to do that.
- London, can you touch your ear? Put your hand on your head. Can you touch your head? Up, over. Can you do that? Up and over. Mommy, will try to help you.
- Where's your arm? Touch your head. Touch your head. Oh, look. Look. OK, that was good.
- I'm sitting here with Ella. And Ella is three years old. Are you still three? I was going to just ask you to do something really simple. Could you do this? Arm straight up to the sky.
- SPEAKER 2: Can you put your arm up? I'll put my arm up. Daddy will put his arm up. Can you put yours?
- SPEAKER 1: Thank you. That would be wonderful help. Now, reach right over your head. Boop--
- SPEAKER 2: Like you're touching your ear with your hand.
- SPEAKER 1: Can you do that?
- SPEAKER 2: Up and then touch your ear. This one over here.
- SPEAKER 1: And her arm-- oh, and Mom, that was perfect. Because at her age, her head is large enough in proportion to her body that your arm doesn't quite reach.
- SPEAKER 2: That's right.
- SPEAKER 1: You have to be like five before that happens.
- So we're here with Abigail. Abigail is four years old. And she's growing just the way a four year old would. So Abigail, please do this with me. Take your arm and put it straight up. And reach right over the middle of your head. See if you can touch your ear. Oh, close. Nicely done. Thank you so much.
