

A transsexual (Hijra) dances at a gathering in Bangladesh, where a group met in the capital to demand government action to provide legal protection from persecution. Hijras are treated as social outcasts but assigned a special status. They typically earn a living by singing, dancing, and other performances.